BETTER ROADS ADVOCATED BY MOST RURAL COUNCILS

Impressing upon the Provincial Government the urgent need of embarking upon as large a highway improvement program as possible in what promises to be a record tourist year for Canada, various delegations have submitted their demands.

Good roads are essential if the tourist business of Alberta is to represent a turnover of millions instead of several hundred dollars annually.

Now the province is waking up to the situation and various districts are taking the initiative, following the trail blazed by the Alberta Motor Association which has consistently advocated larger road improvement and

"Get the tourist into the province and we will spend 80 cents out of every dollar what are farm products, the other 20 cents going for car operating costs."

"That means if we had the roads, we would have the tourist, eager to come here to see some of the most scenic spots in the world. And when we have the tourist, we have a cash business that will put additional trade on the roads for the tourist to travel over."

"This is time for various organizations, municipal councils and chambers of commerce to band together for better roads, which will pay for themselves several times over through increased returns for our farm producers."

Needless Fatalities

The "drowning" season is at hand.

Once more the time of the year approaches when readers of the news papers may expect to see reports, under more or less startling headlines, of casualties in water, stories of adults and children who have gone down for the last time.

During the late spring, summer and early fall months, water will take its annual toll of victims in the prairie provinces.

The pity is it—and yet a consolation, too—that most of these deaths could have been avoided, for practically all drowning accidents can be attributed to carelessness of one's energies, and both of them to-day are avoidable. If the necessary precautions are taken, there will be no drowning.

Some people drown because they cannot swim. Others, who are able to swim, lose their lives in the water because they are physically unable to stand the shock, and develop cramps which the muscles and make it impossible for them to help themselves.

The best way to prevent drowning is to live in the water by non-swimmers is to learn to swim. There is nothing difficult about it. Swimming is a comparatively easy art to acquire, though, if it is true, some are apt than others, and as a result learn more rapidly than others how to keep themselves afloat in the liquid element.

It is a much better forbidding to try and girls to go down to the swimming hole to swim. The idea of drowning cannot be blamed very much for attempting to seek relief from the torrid heat of the July and August in the cooling waters of the creek, the slough or the lake, whichever may be hamlet.

The urge which comes from the healthful sports of bathing, swimming, and boating should not be subjects of prohibition in a country where the season for such enjoyment is all too short and the opportunities for healthful recreation somewhat limited.

Instead of restriction there should be complete freedom of association on the part of all parents, teachers and boy and girl should be allowed to swim in pools of water, as early as possible. In some of the tropical countries children are able to swim almost as soon as they can walk and equally as expertly. It would be almost impossible for them to drown.

The urge to swim should be part of the school curriculum and once or twice a week during the summer months, after school hours or during the vacation, children should be taught to swim and enjoy the pleasure of bathing, if there is suitable water within reasonable distance. Swimming should be as natural to the prairie child as walking or running.

As for numbers who perish in water, they are not in normal condition due to the absence of water, even though they be rendered immune, it recently reported discoveries of medical science are authentic.

A Rochester, Minnesota physician recently announced, as a result of research and experimentation, that he has discovered that many people are hypersensitive to cold and that this hypersensitivity can be cured in a simple and easy manner and without benefit of medical attendance or the use of drugs.

To discover whether one is hypersensitive to cold and therefore in danger of succumbing to shock in the water, as there is necessary to do for three or four minutes in full body immersion or twice a day for a few weeks, the person of the hand swells under the treatment if it is a danger signal. The experimenter is likely to shock and drowning if he is submerged into the water, according to this authority.

Fortunately the remedy is as easy and simple as the test. One need only to drink cold water, the hand having practice in swimming disappears. Then according to the Rochester doctor, the "patient" has become desensitized and may venture into the water without incurring any risk of drowning from cramps.

If there is scientific authority for this discovery, a combination of tuition in the art of swimming and desensitization of all who might be subjected to cramps would cut down the loss of life from drowning to almost zero.

It is true that every year lives are lost because boats and canoes are upset and their occupants tilted into the water, but most, if not all, lives lost in cases of this class are accidents. They are not drownings either, that are caused by drowning or overcome by the shock of water. If the former, the risk would have been avoided by learning to swim and if the latter, by the simple method of desensitization before running the risk of going about in any type of capsize craft.

The risks of drowning are so great that the two tasks assigned to a crew of drowning prevention experts and those who work either on or in the water should be to carry out their empire with confidence that their safety is ensured in advance, because they have taken all the necessary precautions to avoid death for themselves and sorrow for their friends and relatives.

The paragraph above should contrite the cost of Roy Fairbanks' darkened screen beauty. She believes that a recent telegram she received is the longest telegraphed proposal ever made.

Mr. Fairbanks, a Detroit admirer, telling himself "well built financially," dispatched a fervent 2,600-word telegram, which ran on over 22 telegraph lines, to the actress, Mr. Fairbanks, at his studio in Los Angeles, asking her to meet him at one's excepting to find out what was going to Hollywood for his answer.

It cost $123.85 to get across his romantic ideas.

Speed Has Been Exaggerated

Germany's Rearmament Program Will Take Some Time To Complete

There is no doubt about the magnitude of Germany's rearmament program; but its speed has been exaggerated. So writes Harmon W. Baldwin, a New York newspaper reporter, in the New York Times. After some apparently exhaustive checking up with expert observers, Mr. Baldwin writes: "Despite contrary report, Germany was not ready to fight. Yes, in eight days, a major war when her troops marched into the Rhineland; she is not ready to-day and she will not be ready next year. It will be 1938 or 1940 at least, before Germany is ready to hope to complete training that vast reservoir of some 6,000,000 untrained men who have no experience with conscription between the ages of 18 and 30. It will be two or three years at least before Germany, although straining every nerve, can pile up the reserve equipment needed for a massive armada and can supply sufficient officers to command it."

But Germany will fight before then, the Times correspondent concedes, if necessity arises to fight. "For one thing, the active service is at war strength, and that 'Germany would probably lose today if France were her only opponent.'

The correspondent's opinion, however, that at the time of Rhineland occupation, Germany would have been beaten, is probably "had to be" exaggerated, and just "Germany would probably lose today if France were her only opponent."

The correspondent observes, however, that Germany's war-making potential, though not minimized, is probably effective.

Over 2000 Scouts Invited To Hold Next International Gathering In Canada

Scout leaders from all over the world will be invited to hold their next international gathering, or over 2000 scouts in Canada, in the summer of 1938. An invitation was made at the meeting of the executive committee of the Canadian general council of the Boy Scouts' Association.

The location of the proposed camp was decided upon at a meeting of a seven-man committee.

The invitation will be presented through the international bureau at the Imperial Headquarters of the Boy Scouts' Association, London. It is understood Poland also is making a strong bid for the meet. The last international meeting was held in 1934 at Stockholm, Sweden, and was attended by 3000 scouts from 24 countries. Canada was represented by a boy patrol of seven.

An Unusual Fatality

Soldier Escaped War Hazards To Be Killed By Bicycle

An immense crowd of people attended a funeral in London, Eng., to honor the memory of an Australian soldier who had been killed in a personal accident while in England as a member of the Australian military contingent to the coronation. He was hit by a bicyclist on Wellington Esplanade, outside Wellington Barracks, where the Australian contingent was quartered.

If Professor's Idea For Appearing Hungry Would Work

The next time you're hungry, don't buy a big steak—just chew a marshmallow stick.

That's the advice Dr. A. J. Carlson, University of Chicago physiology professor, gave colleagues at a conference in Norman, Oklahoma.

"Chew matches, soda straws or anything handy the next time hunger gnaws and you'll feel better," said Dr. Carlson, an authority on hunger, thirst and appetite mechanisms.

This formula, which is used by many physicians, is simple and safe enough to receive to make us truly thankful. THE YELLOW BRIAR

A Story of the Irish on the Canadian Countryside

By PATRICK SLATER

By arrangement with Thomas Allen, Publisher, Toronto.

So the morning after, I rode off in William Marshall's wagon on my way to Mono Mills. The team spanked along the Dundas Road west from Toronto, and, turning northward, we turned slowly over the hills to Mono Mills on the Sixth Line of Chinguacousy. We lodged the night after at a roadside at Tullmore.

Bright and early in the morning, we were up and on our way again. With the team well broken in, I was able to be kindly in his quiet way to the little urchin riding beside him into a strange world. The flight of wild pigeons, the flow of the redtail hawk, the bold, sturdy, and surely explained as the creaking wagon lumbered slowly along. The country gradually became rough and broken. A great hill stretched up before us; and, as the team had to crest small, dusty, cloudy peaks newly washed clean.

"Oh! Sir!" I cried, in childish dismay. "Will we ever get up that powerful big hill?"

"Just ride a little, lad. The man told me, 'and we'll kick that little old hill once we get a hold of him.' And when we got up the hill, I saw the road, now winding wide, to disclose a still greater one to threaten us."

"Oh, Sir!" I exclaimed, clutching his coat. "We'll never get up that terrible big hill!"

"Patrick!" Mr. Marshall told me, "you and I didn't cross the great stormy ocean to be scared by little things like that. You just go up to things like that and give them a good ding."

The man's words were fine, though a short journey home with the broiling thoughts that chased one another through my head.

In the afternoon we pulled up at Henderson's blacksmith shop. The anvil was ringing—"clink! clank! clang!" and the bellows were blowing like a steam bell. A glowing horse-shoe into shape amid a spray of flying stars. Out on the anvil to smart the nostrils drifts the smell of burning coals and the pungent smell of a hoof burned in the fitting.

Michael Costigan bestirred himself to reset a square wagon wheel let into the rear axle of our vehicle. The repair took out the time for a meal. The boy, Isham, brought over nearly every hot bite, his mother sticking out the corner of his mouth in a cut-glass bowl. He was a fat grey squirrel cocked on a nearby box. By the bigness of his eyes I knew he was a tender, but healthy, egg, standing by.

"It'll noo, Mike Costigan!" the child cried to his father. "It'll noo, Mike Costigan!"

"I'll noo, Isham!" the father shouted back at him. "If you had a band as tight as that around you body at the belly button you'd be a cheap little lad to feed."

Some one who'd been the blacksmith's boy, "Ore More."

Then Costigan was treated to the song:

Now who is this grimy-faced man that we hear,
Driving his cart as he hammers our gear?

O, the noises he makes would split any ear,
It's Michael, the blacksmith at Mono."

Later in the afternoon we drove to the place where the yellow balsam grows. It was Friday, the 24th of September, 1847, a beautiful day, clear and after the rains. At the big log house a warm welcome was given to the party, and the host pointed out the various parts of the house.

It was a pioneer farm with ten acres of land, and the house was built of logs. The roof was made of shingles, and the floor of pine boards. The walls were made of logs, and the windows were made of pine.
